INTRODUCING THE STORY
Explain to the group that a terrible event that has come to be known as the “Holocaust” took place in Europe in the 1930s-1940s. The German people were experiencing difficulties, and many people were out of work. When Adolf Hitler rose to power, he blamed Germany’s hard times on the Jewish people (among others). Tell the students that to escape certain death in work camps, the Jewish people were forced to leave their homes and friends to search for hiding places. This book tells the story of the Frank family, who sought safety in a small, attic-like apartment, and after two years of hiding were found by the Nazis. The focus of this book is on the teenage daughter Anne, who recorded those years in a diary.

CROSS-CURRICULAR ACTIVITIES
Oral Skills/Social Studies: Fostering Tolerant Children
Define prejudice as the pre-judging of another person, usually in a negative way. Explain that prejudice comes from thoughtless hatred or dislike of a person’s color, religion, or nationality. Give some examples of prejudice, and then have the group offer their own examples. Extend this activity by further explaining that prejudice (as well as discrimination and segregation), have existed not only in Nazi Germany, but all over the world. Explain that the type of prejudice experienced by Anne Frank’s family is known as anti-Semitism, and that prejudice can take many forms. Brainstorm with the group various instances of prejudice, discrimination, and segregation. Create a chart.

Math/Social Studies: A Timeline to Remember
Use the “Important Dates” section in the back of the book to create a time line. Ask children to answer word problems based on the time line (Example: If Anne was born in 1929 and she was sent to Auschwitz in 1944, how old was she at the time?), or give children blank time lines and have them fill in important dates.

Language Arts/Theater – Break a Leg!
Anne Frank loved to write stories and plays. Divide the class into small groups and have them each write a one or two act play. After they have been approved by you, have the students perform their play for the rest of the class.
