CROSS-CURRICULAR ACTIVITIES

Social Studies: Map of the Continents
Fletcher has markings that look like the continents. Divide children into seven groups and have each group make a construction-paper map of one of the continents. When they have finished, help them tape together their maps to create a map of the world, similar to Fletcher’s markings.

Art: Make a Snow Globe
Ask children to draw their own snow globes. Remind them that a snow globe usually features a wintry scene. Children can draw their scenes within a globe shape; urge them to include falling snow inside the globe. Display snow globes around the classroom.

Language Arts: Describing Your Pet
Jill gets Fletcher at the dog pound; her classroom has a pet rabbit. Have children write a description of a pet they have or would like to have. Encourage them to describe what their pet looks like and acts like, without telling what animal the pet is. Then have children read their descriptions aloud. The rest of the class can try to guess what kind of animal each reading describes.

Science: Tracking Dogs
Fletcher mentions that basset hounds and bloodhounds are known for their tracking abilities. Have children look on the Internet or in books about dogs for information on tracking dogs. Working in pairs, they can write a brief description of one kind of tracking dog and what the dog does when tracking.

INTERNET ACTIVITY
Before you send children to do research using any of the keywords listed below, you may wish to try them yourself to be sure the sites are suitable.

Tongue Twisters
Jasper the flea loves tongue twisters. Have children use the keywords tongue twisters to find examples of tongue twisters on the Internet. Children can write down one tongue twister each and then try to say them aloud three times to the class. Collect their tongue twisters in a class book.
